TRAINS GOING SOUTH — TRAINS GOING NORTH

[illegible]

The gates to the north park have been repaired. No cows need apply for admission.

The Congregational News for June comes out. It contains a full report of the semi-annual meeting of the Colorado Congregational Association.

Young grasshoppers, in almost countless numbers, are swarming in the foot-hills, some two and one-half miles northwest of the city. Golden Transcript.

It is alleged that ex-Governor Routt has received advices from the managers of his mine in Leadville that the yield for the past few days has been $1000 a day.

The Banner mine which has been undergoing repairs for the last three weeks, [illegible] proper column.

The Colorado Springs Smelting Company holds its regular monthly meeting Monday evening, June 2d, at the office of Dr. T. G. Hope, the president.

A. H. COWLES, Sec'y.

The State Board of Agriculture have tendered the presidency of their college to Professor E. E. Edwards, of McLean county college, Illinois. The college is to be opened on the first of September, and a jubilee may be expected on the occasion.

An editor has one advantage over a king. When an editor gets out a king in his open game he draws by four aces while kings, he is never sure at best of a second. You have probably remarked this yourself. Denver Industrial Press.

The fine bred stallion, Bacon's Barbaro, will make a season at the fair grounds, under the control of Mr. Tevis. This well bred horse was sired by Green's Old Barbaro, his dam by Kysor's Hambletonian. Breeders will do well to examine this horse.

[illegible] the paper of Pueblo on [illegible] The English language suffers as it never suffered before, and everybody is sad as they view the ruin wrought. We are devoutly thankful that we are not a "poet." Dead Mule Index.

Every newspaper man will [illegible] the following from an exchange: "Get your printing done where you please. It is your right, but please do not, after spending your money elsewhere, come to this office begging for free local notices. It is not business. It is not decent."

On the 16th of June a foot-race will be run between Mr. Clem. Stockbridge and Mr. F. M. Ermatinger. The forfeit money [illegible] Gulch of Old Town; and the contest will be an exciting one as both gentlemen are in training. The race will be a 100 yard dash.

Dr. Crosby has recently rented his offices, which now present a neat and artistic appearance. New carpets and furniture, new wall paper and kaisomining give the rooms a very attractive appearance. The work was done by Mr. Ainsworth Brown, and testifies to his skill in decorating.

Mr. R. Richens, in his advertisement in another column, offers to take unimproved lots in Colorado Springs in payment for mason work. A sample of the work done by Mr. Richens may be seen in the new block of Robbins & Arnold, on Huerfano street. It challenges the admiration of every one who knows a fine job of stone work when he sees it.

We have received the first number of the Colorado Springs Methodist, a good sized church paper, ably edited by Rev. J. A. Shaw. It is an excellent paper, and we wish it much success. We are a little surprised, however, to see it advertising tobacco. The ministers of the M. E. church are behind those of no other denomination in condemning the vile weed. Congregational News.

Chinamen are not appreciated in Leadville, as will be inferred from the tone of the following item from the Chronicle: A considerable excitement was started on Chestnut street last evening by the appearance on top of one of the incoming stages of a man whom the crowd mistook for a genuine Chinese. The dark-featured gentleman, who turned out to be a harmless Mexican, was greatly annoyed by the momentary attention paid him by the crowd.

The season of school is the dead month for the year, and the week just ended has been no exception to the rule. The reason is manifest. Parents are thought not to send the pupils home sooner.

Engineers were troubled with the snow on the pass yesterday. A teamster, who went twenty-six miles up the pass on Friday, was compelled to leave his wagon and return to the city. The snow, at that point, on Saturday morning, nine inches or more had fallen and the storm had not ceased, but gave signs of breaking away.

PERSONAL

Hon. W. S. Jackson returned from Leadville, Friday.

Count J. S. Lockroft came down from Denver yesterday.

T. F. H. Meyer, esq., arrived in the city yesterday from New York.

Dr. C. Kendall Hopper came in the canyon Friday on his way from Leadville to New York. Carbonate appears to agree with him.

Mr. V. Price was confirmed a justice of the peace at the recent meeting of the County Commissioners. Judge Price is ready for business.

Mr. S. K. Baldwin, an old army friend of Mr. T. H. Woodgate, is in the city. As members of the 13th Missouri cavalry, both were campaigning in this state, and New Mexico in the latter part of the war.

Mrs. Col. Baron arrived home last Thursday evening from St. Louis, where she has been for over three months under the care of Dr. John Greer, the eminent oculist, and we are happy to say her eyesight is improved. We congratulate the colonel upon her return and [illegible]

ARRIVAL

The A. T. & S. F. which has been using a large number of the cars of the Boston & Colorado Equipment Trust Company on the D. & R. G. Railway since December 15, refused to pay the rental therefor yesterday. It is supposed that apprehending the success of the state in its injunction suit before Judge Bowen it is holding on to all the odds and ends it can.

A New Freight Line.

It is rumored there a freight line will be established between this city and River Bend. Several freighters were talking the matter over with our merchants yesterday. [illegible] and by [illegible] continued or they have proved deep dissatisfaction among the business men of Colorado Springs, and if [illegible] grounds can be [illegible] freighting [illegible] will soon be busy bringing goods across the country from River Bend.

The Ku-Klux Traveler.

Pueblo Press. Has the following concerning the recent murder in that city: "The grand jury has not sent to and indictments as yet, but rumor has it that they will exonerate Mr. Howard and return a true bill against Eggleston. This is just as it should be. In our opinion Eggleston is the man who did the killing. Our reason is this, that the bullet hole in Mr. Conner was too large to come from Mr. Howard's pistol, which was a thirty-two. It must have been made by either thirty-eight or forty-two calibre piece."

The remains of W. H. Conner, who was most foully murdered on Saturday the 17th inst., were taken yesterday and shipped to Newark, New Jersey, for burial.

The Ar-ken-saw Traveler.

To the Editor of the Gazette:

"We have been shown at Judge Price's office a musical instrument of apparently great antiquity, bearing the following inscription: 'This violin was discovered in the grave of the Ar-ken-saw traveler, who was exhumed upon the ranch of Benjamine F. Crowel, by Harry True and John Potter, while prospecting for carbonates on the Sabbath day, under the witch-hazel guidance of Joseph Kenyon and Doctor Reynolds.'

"This is, without doubt, the identical instrument with which this renowned traveler for nearly a century stirred with witching sound the floral foliage of the palmetto trees that shaded the evening dance on Congo-green at New Orleans.

MUCILAGE.

Hail and Farewell.

To the citizens of Colorado Springs:

The undersigned, while journeying in the direction of the "Westward Star," came upon your city and discovered your streets and alleys to be in an unhealthy condition, and many of your citizens complaining of ailments that required frequent visitations to the drug store. In view of these facts we immediately went to work and placed your city in a clean and healthy condition, and have now determined to depart from your city immediately after the Sabbath day exercises of to-day, and we desire to express our thanks to your excellent mayor, also to Mr. Clark, our gentlemanly landlord, and Mr. Mackey, your street engineer, for their kind and generous hospitality.

Respectfully, tramps from necessity,

GEORGE M. JEWETT,
C. KERNEN,
H. JONES,
GEORGE HALL.

Trouble in Leadville.

The recent outrages [illegible] citizens in the shape of highway robbery, [illegible] stealing, gambling and the like, has aroused a number of our more prominent citizens, to the necessity of doing something to rid the city of the villains who have come here to prey upon the honest, hard-working men whom our mines have drawn to Leadville. The matter has been informally discussed and the initial steps taken for the formation of a committee whose duty it shall be to discover and punish the perpetrators of these crimes. The committee is one to be feared, and [illegible] will be careful and look a little out. Leadville Eclipse.

Dry Fine Essay.

The Georgetown Miner says: "The arrangements recently made by the State Firemen's association for a dry plug race at the tournament, instead of the usual firemen's test of water through hose, has provoked unfavorable comment all around the state. Different hose companies had about concluded they didn't want to be parties to such 'make-believe' firemen work, the Boulder Boys declined to participate, claiming to be firemen, but not race horses, and Pueblo also kicked. We have intimation that we learn reliable that the committee will soon issue a circular changing the arrangement already announced and making the hose races water tests, as usual."

Items from the Gunnison.

We take the following [illegible] from a correspondent in Crested Butte, Gunnison county:

[illegible] good. The weather is [illegible]

The boys have just begun to come, 300 in the last six days, and they are still coming from all directions. The majority, however, from Leadville.

There were three valuable discoveries made last week, the assay runs 300 ounces to the ton.

A vein of pure, native antimony, has been struck in five different places within the last two weeks.

The Silk Mountain will have to yield their treasures this season.

A New Name for an Old Trade.

The Horse and Stock Press defines a "mayor" to be a person who frequents [illegible] and [illegible] gouges [illegible] the deadwood drifts and stopes, though not always [illegible] to town, where he prosecutes his calling. He is regarded not so much a freebooter as a gleaner, who goes over the stubble-field gathering up what has been left or would otherwise be lost. [illegible] pick out any bagfuls of good looking ore that his eye may happen to light upon, and he has a quick eye to their detection. More or less of this gouging or cleaning up work has been practiced in all the old and nearly deserted mining camps in the country, the overhauling of mine dumps being [illegible] wherever their owners will permit it.

Supplies for the Refugees.

Mrs. F. H. Merrill, wife of the Rev. J. H. Merrill of this city, has collected and forwarded two barrels of goods for the negro refugees in Kansas. The following letter from Governor St. John has been received by Mr. Merrill:

TOPEKA, KAS., May 26th, 1879.

J. H. Merrill, Esq.:

MY DEAR SIR—Your letter of the 23rd inst. inclosing bill of lading for two barrels of refugee goods forwarded for the benefit of the colored people fleeing from the south to Kansas is duly received and so soon as the goods come to hand, the receipt thereof will be acknowledged by Mr. J. C. Hebbard, secretary of the Freedmen's Relief association of Kansas at this place.

Please accept the thanks of the association for the donation with the assurance that the same shall be used faithfully and judiciously for the benefit of the unfortunate class of people for whom it is intended.

JOHN P. ST. JOHN,
Governor.

A Complimentary Sketch.

A late issue of the Masonic newspaper published in New York contains nearly a two column biographical sketch of Captain R. W. Woodbury, proprietor of the Denver Times, and the head of the masonic fraternity of this state. A very correct likeness of Captain Woodbury accompanies the sketch. The article, which gives a resume of his career as a mason, and which credits him with eighteen degrees in masonry closes as follows: "He has always been a hard-working man, superintending every department of his business, and while not wealthy, has got beyond poverty and the necessity for the incessant toil which governed his earlier life.

With one exception, he has been longer in the editorial harness than any other Colorado publisher. He has exercised a wide influence in laying the foundations of the young empire growing up in the Rocky Mountains.

He is grand representative of the grand lodges of Florida, Louisiana and New Hampshire; grand chapter of Florida and grand commandery of Florida and grand [illegible] Maryland [illegible] near the [illegible] in Colorado [illegible] has been [illegible] and his name [illegible] the [illegible] the services [illegible] sought.

Remarkable Finish.

There was some very pretty racing on the fair grounds yesterday afternoon. The track was in first-class condition, the horses in good train and the spectators enjoyed the sport exceedingly.

The first event was a running race between Mr. Ted Stephenson's Young Jerusalem and Mr. [illegible] sorrel mare Marge. The horses got off with a rather uneven start, Marge having one better of the bargain. The contest was a sharp one, but Marge benefited by her advantage at the outset and came in half a neck in advance of Lexington. This was a very [illegible] among the spectators.

After the running race a trotting match came off between Wilbur's Lake and [illegible] Bessie White. Mile heats, best two in three.

The horses went off well together on the first heat, and wagers were even on the result. Lake put in some excellent work and came under the wire about a length ahead of Bessie White. This achievement made Lake rather the favorite, but although he did splendidly on the second heat, the mare was on her metal and beat him by a length. By this time the interest was up to fever heat. Both horses had confidence [illegible] and [illegible] the horses got away well and went down [illegible] Lake [illegible] the mare's head. Everybody [illegible] and ran to ward to see whether the driver, Mr. Pool, was killed or not, but that gentleman knew a trick worth two of that, and alighting safely on his feet, seized the mare by the bridle and thus prevented her from running away. In the meantime Lake [illegible] around the track and won the heat and race. During the accident the day's sports were perhaps the most enjoyable of any given this season.

Branding Cattle.

The Texas Live Stock Journal makes the following remarks concerning the methods of branding cattle, which will be found interesting to all the stock men in Colorado:

Dealers in hides have [illegible] against the custom of branding cattle on the side, hip, or in any other place where the burning of the skin is calculated to injure the more valuable part, and at a recent meeting of [illegible] this subject was said on this point. Mr. McVitty said:

It is actually necessary to brand the hides of cattle in Texas, it seems to me a system of branding could be adopted whereby the cattle might be marked on either side of the neck, for there the leather is of much less value than at the hips, where the best part of the leather is found, or the cattle might be branded on the forehead, or by a mark on the ears or horns, but undoubtedly the best remedy would be to inform dealers in hides that they could sell more easily and get a larger price for them if they were free from brands and other injuries.

Another gentleman remarked that "The damage occasioned to hides by branding is not only a loss to the tanner, but to the consumer of leather. The consumer of leather, when he buys it as damaged, is under the impression that he buys it at a less price, but a great deal of this leather is dear at any price, consequently, if a Texas or Buenos Ayres hide, which has been damaged, sells at fifty cents below the value of other hides, it may be that it is dear even at that price. The loss occasioned in these purchases is divided between the consumer and the tanner, so that if there should happen to be a loss of 80 cents on a hide, the tanner knowing that he could afford to pay more money for perfect hides, it certainly reflects upon the dealers who are in the habit of selling the hides of cattle that have been branded. In Texas a cow brings about nine dollars, and a steer $13. If a tanner can afford to pay forty or fifty cents more for hides that are in a perfect condition, which I have no doubt every tanner in this room would be willing to do, it certainly reflects upon this practice of branding by the men who raise cattle; for if it is worth raising a steer for $12, and the hides of those cattle could be sold for half a dollar or a dollar more without the branding, it should certainly be an incentive for the dealer in hides to send them to market in an undamaged condition. The total receipts of hides at the port of New York last year were over 2,500,000, and probably a million more hides were sent from Texas, Colorado and the Territories which are just as badly branded as the western hides. Is there no way of informing those people that they are losing millions of dollars every year by this system of branding? I hope, therefore, this question will be discussed thoroughly, for I think it is one of the most important which can be brought to our attention."

The speaker announced the appointments of Mr. Upson on the committee on military affairs and enrolled bills; of Mr. Johnson as visitor to the military academy at West Point, and of Mr. Meyers of Indiana as visitor to the naval academy at Annapolis.

The house then adjourned.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Great Storm.

ST. JOE, June 2d.—A dispatch from Irving, Ks., dated June 1st, 5:40 p. m., reports 30 deaths as certain and 53 people badly injured, in the recent cyclone. The people want money to get the necessaries which are not at hand. Ten persons were buried to day. From 50 to 60 families at Frankfort, Ks., are homeless and destitute of clothing, provisions and farming implements. The citizens of that place have donated $700. More aid is needed.

A dispatch from Sabetha, of June 2d, 7:30 a. m., says from 70 to 100 persons are destitute of everything. Bedding and clothing are in great demand.

ATCHISON, June 2.—Twenty were killed and 48 severely wounded at or near this place. Fifteen are reported killed and many wounded in the vicinity of Delphos, Ottawa county, and several casualties are reported in other parts of the county traversed by the storm. It is therefore certain that no less than 40 have been killed and 70 to 80 wounded—all the latter very severely. The destruction of property will foot up very large but no reliable estimate can yet be formed of the amount. Hundreds of houses have been destroyed and crops in the path of the cyclone utterly destroyed. The track of the cyclone varies from one fourth of a mile to one mile in width. As it occasionally left the ground for a short distance and again descended, wherever it touched it swept everything clean, houses, trees and crops. When it passed the Blue river it lifted every drop of water in its course. The committee from this city and St. Joe held a meeting at Irving and issued the following address:

IRVING, KS., June 2.—At a meeting of the relief committees of the cities of St. Joe and and Atchison, held at this place to-day, it was decided to jointly present to the charitably disposed persons of the neighboring localities that having come to this place and made a thorough examination we find the destruction of life and property occasioned by the tornado of the 30th ult., which is unprecedented in the history of our state; that many of the inhabitants thus visited are left entirely destitute of houses, clothing, food and farming implements, and that unless immediate relief is afforded great suffering must ensue. To the accomplishment of this end we propose to exercise the discretion accorded us by our localities respectively, and in addition to the assistance already furnished we hereby authorize the relief committee of Irving to draw at sight on J. C. Tomlinson, chairman of the relief committee of the city of Atchison, for the sum of $500, and on H. S. L. Smith, chairman of the relief committee of St. Joe for a like sum of $500; such money to be used by said relief committee of Irving as in their judgment may seem best toward relieving the destitute of Marshall county; that the secretary of this committee is instructed to forward a copy of the foregoing to the mayors of Leavenworth, Kansas, and Kansas City, Mo., with the request that they forward such assistance as may be at their disposal. The secretary is further instructed to send a like copy with a like request to the county commissioners of Marshall county. Contributions may be sent to J. S. Walker, treasurer of the Irving relief committee. (Signed),

Soon after, he said to his niece he was dying and in thirty minutes expired sitting in his chair, seemingly conscious to the last. He lectured in this city on Wednesday evening last and remained for the purpose of visiting relatives. His remains leave here for his home in Carrolton, Mo., at five o'clock this evening.

The coldness of the south toward Tilden may be in part explained by the fact that the democratic success in the south is not dependent on "those barrels of money."

A year ago it would hardly have been thought that by the present time certain republican papers and leaders would look upon President Hayes as an exponent of sound republican doctrine.

In Switzerland it is proposed to re-establish the death penalty. This calls forth from Victor Hugo the opinion that "To retain the scaffold signifies barbarism; to re-establish it would be imbecility." If the law does demand that a man's life be taken, science can find a less revolting way.

Bonds not maturing until July 1st will be redeemed any time during the month of June. This is a wise precaution of Secretary Sherman which will prevent any confusion arising in July owing to the $300,000,000 of bonds that must be redeemed at that time, and the heavy payment for the 4 per cent. bonds sold in April.

The Atchison road commenced by breaking provision after provision of the lease. It now defaults in the payment of rent, yet the Tribune will write fiery editorials about the attempt of the owners of the road to break an "honest contract." We think the Tribune editor would drive a tenant out of his house very quickly if he declined to pay the rent.

The New York Tribune gives currency to the rumor that Secretary Evarts is talked of as the successor of President Hayes. The election of Mr. Evarts would be something for the country to be proud of, but there is little danger of its happening. If any man connected with the present administration succeeds President Hayes, it will be John Sherman.

It seems that the Denver & Rio Grande minority intend to precipitate upon the state of Colorado a repetition of the Erie war, with all that this implies. Denver Tribune.

This will depend on the Atchison company. If it chooses to inaugurate the Gould-Fisk method of retaining possession of a railroad, in defiance of the stockholders and with a total disregard for all law and justice, there is likely to be such a war.

In regard to the railroad war, the Times says, "The contest, analytically reviewed, is of neither greater or less importance to the commonwealth at large than the differences constantly arising between mining corporations, and in which the state never thinks of assuming the position of prosecutor or arbitrator." This is a mistake. The railroad is a common carrier, and the public is much more interested in its proper management than in a private corporation.

When the governor of Rhode Island is nominated the sergeant-at-arms makes the following old-fashioned proclamation: "Take notice that Charles C. Van Zandt has been elected captain-general and chief of the state of Rhode Island and Providence plantations. God save the state of Rhode Island and Providence plantations." The inauguration is called election day because until within thirty-five years all the legal voters went to Newport and there cast their votes for governor.

The Tribune asks the question, "Has Colorado grown so fast in the past three or four months that she can afford to, not only discriminate against a road, but can actually drive it away?" We answer no. But the state has grown so large that it will allow no foreign corporation to come within her borders, in total disregard, and we may say defiance, of her laws, and swallow up by trickery, corruption and dishonesty her local roads. The action of the attorney-general simply says to railroad corporations you may come into our state but you must also obey our laws. That this is necessary may be seen from the fact that Counsellor Read in the quo warranto case claimed that the attorney-general had no jurisdiction in the case because the A., T. & S. F. Co. had never organized under our state law and hence was not amenable to any of our laws or law officers. The simple question in this whole case is this, shall a corporation be allowed to do business in this state and ask the protection of our laws, while at the same time that corporation considers itself above our laws and not amenable to them? It strikes us that Colorado is not sufficiently "hard up" for railroads to give an affirmative answer.

Few people estimate the effect of President Hayes' vetoes on the independent thinking voter. His liberal and conciliatory policy toward the south in the earlier part of his administration showed the country that a narrow partisan spirit would not determine his acts. For this reason it is believed that his vetoes have been intended in the broad interests of public good. Since then, however, President Hayes has been as stalwart of stalwarts from the beginning of his administration, the cry of the democrats that the republicans want the election laws so as to carry the election in 1880 would be more generally believed. But the fact that the vetoes came from a man, who, on account of his non-partisan policy, has incurred the bitter hatred of Conkling, Howe, Logan and others who have been trying to stir up a sectional feeling, has a powerful influence. Republicans at length are beginning to realize the legend that "he serves his party best, who serves his country best."

The Denver News of Sunday had the following on the railroad situation: The repeated violations of their lease of the Rio Grande are of no consequence to the attorney general, so long as in violating them the Santa Fe does not infringe on the rights and franchises of a Colorado corporation. The Denver and Rio Grande is a Colorado corporation. It pays taxes on more miles of railroad than any other corporation in the state, and has a right to demand protection from foreign companies. The question as to whether the Santa Fe has any right to operate a line in this state has been taken to the supreme court. Pending its settlement there, the Santa Fe goes on exercising a right which, to say the least, is questionable, and this to the detriment of another corporation, which, being refused possession of its property is compelled to await the slow process of the courts. The Santa Fe and its friends seem in no way anxious to dispose of the legal question at issue. The policy of delay if changed could easily determine the rights of both roads at once. But the dilatory course is pursued with the intention to weaken the resources of the Rio Grande and bring about overtures for a compromise. Happily for Denver and its wholesale trade no such plan is likely to be consummated.

The New York Times has analyzed the vote on the Warner silver bill with the following result: Counting the 32 members paired on each side the vote would stand 146 yeas to 129 nays, which are distributed as follows:

	For	Against
New England	3	23
Middle States	13	49
Southern States	99	4
Western States	31	53
Total	146	129

The per cent. of the whole number of votes cast by each section for the bill is as follows: New England 12 per cent., Middle States 21 per cent., southern states 96 per cent., western states 47 per cent. This shows every section of the country except the south was strongly against the bill, and the south was nearly unanimous for it. We have already drawn attention to another important fact that the bill was supported by only four republicans and opposed by only ten democrats. This makes it essentially a southern democratic measure. The passage of this bill better than anything else shows the danger of a solid south. A solid south passed the bill which was overwhelmingly opposed by every other part of the country. It also shows that the country cannot look for any wise or sound financial legislation from the democratic party.

The Ohio State Ticket.

It was our opinion that Judge Taft would have been the strongest candidate for Hamilton county, but the convention by a small majority gave the place to the Hon. Charles Foster, and the result will be accepted by republicans everywhere as the will of the party and the best for the party. This is not the time for republicans to sit by the wayside and grumble about men. The interests involved are greater than men. Every patriot, therefore, will fall into line. In fact they are in line now. In this respect the masses are in advance of the leaders. Our candidate for governor is no stranger to the people of Ohio or of the nation. He has both a national and state reputation, and a good one. He is both a liberal and a stalwart. In a word, he is a republican and all that the term implies. He is a great organizer and an aggressive worker, and wherever there may be work to be done he will be there, and no one need fear that the party colors will be suffered to trail at any time from this day to the close of the polls in October when the great republican victory will be announced. Cincinnati Gazette.

Tilden Movement in the South.

It will be seen from the extracts published in another column that the southern democratic newspapers are almost a unit in opposing the nomination of Samuel J. Tilden as the democratic candidate for the presidency. Tilden's candidacy arouses little enthusiasm in the south even among his professional supporters, while the great majority of the southern democracy look upon his nomination with aversion. The American people look with abhorrence upon the politician whose fame consists in his managing abilities and wonderful adroitness. There are men who become so enamored of an object and so resolutely determined to secure it that they are willing to resort to any means however base to gain their ends. The Appeal does not place Mr. Tilden in this unenviable category, but he has been placed there by the almost united voice of the nation, and the next national democratic convention will not be guilty of the folly of nominating a man who has lost the confidence of the party and a man whom many democrats believe to be the embodiment of corruption. Memphis Appeal, (Dem.)

MEMOIRS OF METTERNICH

PARIS, May 15.

Albert Wolff, of the Figaro, being at Vienna for the marriage fetes, wisely bethought him of something of much more interest to the world, the memoirs of Metternich. This book, written by the great Austrian minister, who was the rival in statecraft of the first Napoleon, has been a standing subject of literary and political curiosity for the last fifteen years. What had the old man to say of his time, of his contemporaries and of his share in shaping history? It was known that he had written frankly and with insight on, perhaps, the most momentous epoch the world has ever seen; and people were the more anxious to know what he had written because the secret was being carefully kept from them for prudential reasons. It was thought better to postpone the publication until most of the persons mentioned in the memoirs had passed away, and until the events had ceased to have a very intimate connection with the burning questions of the hour. The allotted period of waiting is now nearly over, and the first of the many volumes will soon be placed in the publisher's hands. Albert Wolff, meantime, has most opportunely given us a faint glimpse of all.

He contrived this very simply by going straight to Prince Richard Metternich and asking for information. The prince introduced him to Councillor Klinkowstrom, who for five years has been at the head of a perfect editorial department of men of letters, clerks and copyists working steadily on the preparation of the memoirs for the world. There is matter enough, it seems, to fill a hundred volumes, for the great Austrian chancellor was writing this intimal history of his life nearly all his life. Nothing is wanting, from the papers to cuttings from the journals. His manuscript notes alone fill about fifty volumes neatly bound, and the appendix of references extends to at least double that number. Together they form quite a library which occupies an entire hall in the Metternich palace. They remained under lock and key from 1850, when the chancellor died (urging his son to keep them from the public for twenty years), to 1873, when Prince Richard handed them over to Councillor Klinkowstrom. The first volume will see the light this year, so strict faith has been kept with the dead. It will be published simultaneously in Vienna, Paris and London in a German, a French and an English edition. The "copy" is sent to the respective publishing houses by special messengers, and not by the post. The first part of the work is purely autobiographical. It gives the history of the chancellor from his birth to 1815—his supreme hour when he signed the treaty that concluded the labors of the congress of Vienna. The second part carries the story to 1848, and it contains passages of absorbing interest—his studies of Napoleon and Alexander, and a thousand sketches and even anecdotes of other leading personages of his time. The prince dearly loved a good story, and willingly set it down. Here is one. In the year 1806 the Marquis de Pouilly, a man of a singular "homeliness" of appearance, was sent as an envoy from Austria to the Sultan of Morocco. "You must be a very intelligent man," said the sultan, the moment he saw him. The marquis bowed low in acknowledgement of the compliment and expressed a wish to know why his majesty had formed so favorable an opinion. "Why, you have such a queer phiz," said the prince, simply (une si fichue figure.) "that I feel sure that our master would never have chosen you out for the graces of your mind." Another anecdote shows how our statesman very narrowly escaped being a churchman and a cardinal prince. He was very intimate with a certain Cardinal Albani and used to talk freely with him of whatever came into his mind—great things or little things, it was all one. He had consequently often told the cardinal that red was his favorite color, and the latter, instead of taking this as it was meant, thought it conveyed a hint and set himself to discover the prince's hidden meaning. At last he thought he had found it, and he intimated to Metternich, with a smile, that the Pope would make him a cardinal with all the pleasure in life. "But what ever leads you to suppose that I desire such an honor?" asked the alarmed Metternich. "Why, have you not told me a dozen times that you prefer red to all the colors of the rainbow?"

The third part of the memoirs includes the much talked of will of Metternich. The writer calls it My Political Will, but Political Confession, says Wolff, would be a better title. It gives his opinions, not his wishes, and still less his commands. It is a mere fragment, and he died while it was yet in course of preparation. It is chiefly a statement of his governing motives throughout his long career, and, by consequence, of some of his most secret thoughts. These are continued in the fourth part, which contains a collection of his maxims, his marginal annotations of books, often extremely curious, and part of his correspondence with the great public characters of his time.

The biography of the prince during the stormy time of 1848–51 is compiled chiefly from the diary of the Princess Melanie, his second wife. He was rather too much preoccupied with thought of his own safety at this season to pay much attention to his journals, for he had to fly for his life from the Viennese mob. The princess saved him by putting him at the bottom of a hack cab, covered him with her skirts and vigorously plying her fan at the window to prevent people from looking in, and so smuggling him out of the capital. He went to England, lived at London, Brighton and Richmond, and slowly worked his way back to Vienna as popular passions calmed down. The princess was a model woman and wife. Though racked by a painful disease, she wrote up the memoirs during this period of trouble, that there might be no break in the continuity of a work on which she knew her husband had set his heart. She hardly ever speaks of herself in them—only of her husband and of public events. Others, though, frequently spoke of her, sometimes more than she desired—for instance, when the papers of 1834 spread the report that she had worn the Austrian crown jewels at a diplomatic dinner. Furthermore, it was said that the French ambassador had publicly commented upon her use of them, and that there had been a scene between the pair. Metternich was greatly annoyed by the report, and he took the trouble to give the true version in a dispatch to the Austrian minister at the French court. "You know what a gay city for tittle tattle Vienna is," he wrote. "This is what passed—I had invited the Corps diplomatique and my wife had paid its country attention to her toilet. The French ambassador said to her, 'What very fine diamonds you have there, Madame—they are superb, but they are the crown jewels.' Madame, a little put out—as many persons had already spoken to her of her toilet, to which, as you know, she does not attach more importance than necessary—and 'My diamonds are what they are, and I wear them just as they were given to me. I did not steal them.' The French ambassador replied: 'The diadem has not been stolen, but it is displaced. It is on your head, Madame, and it ought to be at your feet.' This perfectly friendly and harmless conversation was soon converted by rumor into a political scene between the French ambassador and the Princess Metternich."

From the diplomatic correspondence it appears that the prince had three methods of communication with the Austrian ministers at foreign courts (1) an official despatch, (2) a reserved despatch, (3) a private letter containing his real thoughts on the subject. The official despatch was handed in to the government to which the minister was accredited, and after a while the reserved despatch took the same course, as though the Austrian minister could keep nothing back from his good friends, not even the paper drawn up for his own private instructions. The letter on which he was really acting was all the time in his pocket. This ingenious contrivance, it appears, is still much cherished by diplomacy, though by this time everybody knows perfectly well that the second or reserved despatch is as full of politics as the minister's real intentions as the first. Yet from mere force of habit some envoys still go on handing in the second with every appearance of incautious candor, and even contrive in doing so to believe that they are serving their country in a particularly cunning way.

One of the prince's stories shows that the Turkish device of a constitution as a last and desperate remedy for political ills is no new one. When Ali Pasha of Janina was almost at his last legs in his revolt against the porte, he sent post-haste to Metternich to ask him to be good enough to lend him "any good constitution-maker of his acquaintance" as he intended to bestow a boon of that kind on his Albanian followers to keep them in heart. "I told him," says Metternich, "that I did not happen to have any such a person by me, and that the very best constitution he could give the Albanians under the circumstances was to submit in their name to the Turks. The advice was useless by the time it reached him—the Turks had taken his last town."

Metternich died in the very thick of the trouble between Austria and France on the question of the liberation of Italy. He lived just long enough to hear the fatal news of Magenta, and then he tottered to his grave with his burden of eighty-six years. He had seen all the Napoleons and their system from its origin to the very fullest development it ever attained. He judged calmly and well. "There is a grand difference between Napoleonism and Bonapartism. Napoleonism, being necessarily the highest exaltation of an individuality, represents egoism pushed to the farthest limits of individual power. Napoleonism, to be worth anything, requires a Napoleon. Bonapartism expresses a general dynastic idea, and is thus confounded with ideas of the same category, though it holds the last place among them, and is indeed but a simple individual pretension without any serious base." Richard Whiteing, in New York World.

PERSONAL.

"Mark Twain" pays taxes on $67,850 in Hartford, Conn.

General N. P. Banks' eldest daughter is said to be studying in Boston for the stage.

Ex-Governor Bullock, of Georgia, has gone into the grocery business at Elmira, New York.

Associate Justice Hunt, of the United States supreme court, is so much better that he hopes to be able to leave Washington for New York in a week. He rides out daily.

Robert J. Walker, Jr., a son of the ex-secretary of the treasury, ex-senator from Mississippi, and ex-governor of Kansas, is to be married on the 4th of June to Miss Kendig, of Washington.

Mr. Sullivan, of "Pinafore" fame, now intimates in a private letter, it is said, that he will be kept busy in London until winter, and so must forego his contemplated trip to this country this fall.

Mr. W. G. Oakman, who has married the daughter of Senator Conkling, is tall, well made, straight, somewhat of an athlete, dignified, reserved, aristocratic, quiet, a republican, a Philadelphian, was formerly a cotton manufacturer and is a man of cool business judgment. His present position is superintendent of a branch of the Delaware and Lackawanna railroad.

Monsignor Maret, the cure of Vesinet, one of the pope's chamberlains, was tried a few days ago at Versailles on the charge of immorality. He is a handsome man of 46, and had great practice as a confessor of ladies of rank. The court ordered the trial to be conducted with closed doors. It lasted all night, and a verdict of guilty was delivered. The sentence was ten years of that severe punishment called reclusion.

N. P. Willis drew this pen-portrait of Tom Moore in 1835: "His eyes sparkle like a champagne bubble; there is a kind of a wintry red, of the tinge of the October leaf, that seems enamelled on his cheek; his lips are delicately cut, slight and changeable as an aspen; the slightly turned-up nose confirms the fun of the expression, and altogether it is a face that sparkles, beams, radiates. The light that surrounds him is all from within."

The St. Petersburg Gazette points out the curious fact that during the last fifty years all the vacant thrones have been given to German princes. In 1831 a prince of Saxe-Coburg was elected king of the Belgians. A few years later the Greeks—regem petentes—chose Prince Otho of Bavaria for the throne of Greece. Prince George of Landerburg-Glucksburg succeeded the Bavarian prince. A member of the Hohenzollern family now reigns in Roumania. And, finally, the Hessian prince of Battenberg is called to preside over the destinies of Bulgaria.
